Scientists Offer Up Their Unified Theories of 'Everything'

By BRENDA SMILEY - Special to the Sun
March 31, 2006

More than 1,200 people jammed the American Museum of Natural History's LeFrak Theater Wednesday night to hear a panel of cosmologists, astrophysicists and an astronomer try to arrive at a unified theory of everything - sometimes called String Theory - at the 6th annual Isaac Asimov Memorial Panel Debate.

The audience was a mixed group of teachers, students, science buffs, science-fiction fans, oddballs, museum members and sponsors, who had gathered to hear some of today's thorniest scientific notions thrashed out.
